

I am against banks being exempt from calling people on Indiana's no-call list. Banks send us enough junk mail as it is, and to have them calling us about new services which they have already sent us junk mail about is ridiculous. Just because you are a previous customer or even a current one, does not give banks or any other business a right to invade your home with unwanted calls when you have specifically made it clear by registering on the no-call list that you do not want to be bothered. I am currently not registered on the no-call list, but I believe that those who are on it have a right to their privacy.
